Are you ready for the “BIG SIT”?

Wasatch Audubon's participation in the event, "The Big Sit," is our chapter's annual fundraiser in October. However, due to construction of the new Great Salt Lake Nature Center, we cannot use the site this year. WAS board members are looking for a suitable site for this year's Oct. 7 event. Stay tuned to our chapter's Facebook page for details, which we will publish as soon as we have some. If you don't Facebook, contact a board member. One of us will keep you apprised of the situation.

EGG ROBBERS

by Jay Hudson

You wouldn’t think that a shortage of eggs would have an effect on the gold hunting California 49ers. There simply weren’t enough chickens to satisfy the eating habits of thousands of men in their quest for gold. A few of the men who didn’t make it big in the gold fields ran out of money and turned to egg hunting for profit. Word got around that sailing ships stopped off in the Farallon islands (Spanish for cliffs) thirty miles off San Francisco’s Golden Gate for seal meat, birds and eggs. The hunters were killing thousands of seals for their meat and skins. Their egg stealing could amount to 100,000 in a boatload. Men who couldn’t make money from gold turned to being egg robbers and made small fortunes. It got so bad that gangs were formed on the islands and pitched battles broke out. Special shirts and pants were designed to carry eggs. The press called it the “Farallon Island Egg War”.

President’s Pipeline

by Dan Johnston

In July, Laura and I went on A Prairie Home Companion Cruise with Garrison Keillor. We boarded the MS Rotterdam in Rotterdam for two weeks with two stops in Scotland and five stops in Norway. We started out our trip with a four day visit to Germany. Checking out the birds every chance we could was a high priority wherever we went.

There were not a lot of birding tours offered by the Holland American lines, so we made the best on our own. The highlight was the hiring of a local bird guide in Oslo, Norway. Simon Nix took us to some bird hotspots around Oslo for eight hours. We had a great time that day and saw 68 species, 22 of which were new life birds. The highlight birds were: Whopper Swan; Hobby; Red-breasted Flycatcher; Black Woodpecker; and, for the fans of “The Big Year”, a Pink-footed goose. I saw 121 species for the total trip. My World Life List went up by 63 to about 718.

Woodpeckers of the months are the 5 Species I saw on the trip. I saw the Lesser Spotted Woodpecker, the Middle Spotted Woodpecker, the Great Spotted Woodpecker, the Green Woodpecker, and the Black Woodpecker. Yes, they do have three sizes of spotted woodpeckers.

The Black Woodpecker is my favorite. It is a large woodpecker similar to our Pileated Woodpecker. It is entirely black with whitish eye and all-red crown.

Its nest has an oval entrance in mature forest. The range of the Black Woodpecker is in Northern Europe and expanding westward. It is wary, but can be called up by imitating its voice. I first heard it drumming, then landing in the same dead beech tree in which two Hobbys had perched. They made quite a sight.

Good Birding, Dan

When a ship loaded with building materials for a lighthouse arrived, the workers were driven off by armed egg robbers. The Lighthouse Service needed a light on the island to warn ships rounding the horn going to San Francisco, so they got tough. They sent another ship to the island and this time it was guarded with troops. The egg hunting gangs backed off and the light was constructed. The egg hunters were fearful that the light would disturb the nesting habits of the sea birds but the fear proved unwarranted. Eggs continued to be taken until the 1890s, at which time the chicken population on the mainland was large enough to supply not only meat, but eggs. Poaching ended.

The islands were first seen by English privateer Sir Francis Drake in 1579. On a clear day you can see the islands from the Pt.Bonita lighthouse in the Marin Highlands north of San Francisco. The islands became a sanctuary in 1909 and have become a whale watching attraction site along with the thrill of spotting a great white shark feeding on seals. If you go, pick a day with heavy overcast and the sea will be calmer. The last light keeper was taken off the island in 1972 and it is now a U.S. Wildlife Refuge. Landing on the islands requires authorization. The islands have the largest sea bird colony in the United States and on a good day you are sure to increase the size of your Life List. Look for Tufted Puffins to windblown warblers and even visitors from Russia.

President Dan and Laura took a short break from birdwatching to watch the Great American Eclipse in Wyoming, and Barbara and Bruce Perry joined in.

Double Trouble for Greater Sage-Grouse

by Lynn Carroll

The Trump Administration is shaping up to be a disaster for wildlife conservation and our environment, as you’re undoubtedly aware. Couple that with the current make-up of Congress, and it’s doubly disastrous. I’ll explore an example and try to suggest helpful responses.

The federal Sage-Grouse Plan was the result of several years of work among federal and state wildlife agencies, landowners (mostly ranchers), conservation organizations including Audubon, mining and energy companies, aimed at heading off listing of Greater Sage-Grouse under the Endangered Species Act. The Plan, which has been in effect for only two years, concentrates on conserving and improving large expanses of sage-steppe habitat in eleven states. That works well for ranchers, because the kind of habitat that’s good for sage-grouse is also good for cattle. It works for Audubon because of the large number of species that are adapted to this habitat. Extractive industries don’t like the Plan, but have found it easier to live with than listing. You might think that with such broad buy-in, the Plan would be safe. You’d be wrong.

Now attacks on the Endangered Species Act (ESA) by Congress have increased; dozens of bills exempting certain animals or generally weakening the Act have been introduced this year. (These include HR 527 by Rep. Bishop and a rider to the budget concurrent resolution by Sen. Lee, both turning Greater Sage-Grouse management over to the states.) Now mining and drilling interests aren’t so inclined to co-operate in a plan to avoid listing of sage-grouse under the ESA.

Meanwhile Interior Sec. Zinke proposes to shrink or do away with the most restricted category of essential habitat and reconsider the policy of giving priority to habitat protection over energy and mineral leasing in such areas. He might rework the whole Sage-Grouse Plan to concentrate on grouse numbers instead of habitat, which wouldn’t do as much to protect other species of the sagebrush-steppe. Because sage-grouse populations go through boom and bust cycles, setting a goal to maintain some average number of birds may actually lead to a declining population.

Secretary Zinke’s proposals won’t go into effect right away. A formal process of consultation with stakeholders is planned. So we need to pay attention to Audubon’s action alerts for information about possible opportunities to comment (again). I also recommend going to Audubon.org to read more about the evolution and implementation of the Sage-Grouse Plan and future developments. When writing comments, it’s fine to include your opinions and feelings if you identify them as such. Please don’t exaggerate or cite “facts” you can’t confirm.

National Audubon is also urging us to contact our members of Congress, asking them to oppose efforts to weaken the ESA. We who are represented by the authors of those efforts will be more effective dealing with this through the ballot box. We need to find better candidates for 2018.

FIELD TRIP LEADER NEEDED

In August 2017, Lester Talbot retired from the position he has held for over 17 years. Les has planned and led some great field trips over the years, but we are now in search of someone to take over that task. Our meetings are scheduled for the third Tuesday of each month and field trips usually are scheduled for the Saturday following our meeting. Generally, the field trips cover a local area and last for one-half day. Occasionally, a trip can last all day. If you would like more information or are interested in volunteering to lead field trips, please contact Dan Johnston by email at danielj47@comcast.net or by phone at 801-645-8633.
Your retirement as Field Trip Leader marks the end of an era at the Wasatch Audubon Society. In your more than 17 years, month after month you have spent at least half a day and sometimes a full day of your time to led us on birding trips all over northern Utah. You were always knowledgeable about the birds and the area.

Thank You, Les Talbot!

Coming Soon!
“heads-up” reminder
The Big Sit

is coming up on October 7th. We don’t really have a place, but stay tuned for more information.

It is like a Big Day or a bird-a-thon in that the object is to tally as many bird species as can be seen or heard from the 17-foot circle.

OWL PELLETS WANTED
If you happen to discover any owl pellets while out birding, please collect them for me; or let me know the location, and I will get them. I do a lesson in elementary schools on owls, and the students enjoy dissecting the pellets.

Thanks for your help and happy birding.
